Book of the dead.
The conventional title given to collections of funerary texts (spells, incantations, hymns, litanies, etc.) which were during a period of nearly 5000 years cut or painted on walls of pyramids and tombs, and painted on coffins and rolls of papyrus. The earliest texts, ascribed to Thoth and directly connected with him, are—according to documents of the xith and xviiith dynasties—entitled "Rau nu pert em hru" (Chapters of the coming forth [into the day]. During subsequent periods many additions were made, until under the xviiith dynasty the collection comprised nearly 200 distinct compositions (sayings or "chapters")
There are three recensions of the Book of the dead: (1) The Heliopolitan recension, i. e., the texts inscribed in hieroglyphics upon the walls and chambers of the Pyramids during the vth and vith dynasties (cf. "Pyramid texts") and the texts written in cursive hieroglyphics upon coffins of the xith and xiith dynasties. This recension is in accordance with the views held by the priests of Heliopolis. (2) The Theban recension, i. e., the texts written in hieroglyphics upon coffins and papyri from the xviiith to the xxnd dynasties and in hieratic characters upon papyri during the xxnd and xxnd dynasties. These texts were chiefly copied for the priests at Thebes and their families. (3) Saïte (Saïte-Ptolemaic) recension, i. e., the texts written upon papyri and coffins in hieroglyphic, hieratic, or demotic characters from the xxvith dynasty down to the Greco-Roman period. This recension was in all probability supervised by the priests at Saïs.
In this catalogue editions of the Book of the dead—whether edited from one or from various papyri—are arranged chronologically by date, regardless of the recension. Reproductions in facsimile of any particular papyrus—no one of which thus far known comprises all of the several chapters—are entered under the title Book of the dead, with added entry under the name of the papyrus (e. g. Papyrus Ani; Papyrus Sutimes, etc.)
The title "Book of the dead" is a translation of the Arabic "Kitâb al-mayyitun" under which name any papyrus rolls found with the mummies were sold by the Egyptian tomb-robbers. Unsatisfactory and misleading though it is, it has been generally adopted by modern Egyptologists (French: Livre des morts; German: Totenbuch) References are made from the Egyptian titles Rau nu pert em hru; Per m hru; Sâit per em heru. cf. E. A. Wallis Budge's translation of the Book of the dead, 2d ed. rev. & enl. London, 1910) 2nd impression, 1923) For a list of Papyri, see Budge's edition of the Theban recension, London, 1910, vol. i, p. xli–xxxi; Zeitschrift f. ägypt. sprache u. alterthumskunde, 37. bd. (1922) p. 6–10.
The three different groups of religious texts may be correlated as follows; I. The Pyramid texts. (a) Engraved in five pyramids, about 2625–2475 b. c. (b) Exclusively for the pharaohs; sharply distinguished from the Coffin texts and the Book of the dead. (c) Older materials, from about the 27th to the 25th centuries b. c. II. The Coffin texts. (a) Written with ink on the insides of wooden coffins (very rarely on papyrus) 23d to the 18th centuries b. c. (b) For the nobles and the well-to-do; not sharply distinguished from the Book of the dead. (c) A large proportion of Pyramid texts, with much additional material that later passed into the Book of the dead. III. The Book of the dead. (a) Written on a papyrus roll and placed in the tomb, 16th century b. c. until the Christian era. (b) For all classes of society; not sharply distinguished from the Coffin texts. (c) A large body of Coffin texts, also other, probably older, material. (cf. J. H. Breasted's "The Oriental Institute," 1933, chap. vii, "The Coffin texts," p. 152–154)

Biographical notes and bibliography included in "Einleitung" (p. xi–xxi)
Among the pieces here attributed to Georg Reutter der Ältere are six capricci and a ricercare which appear in a contemporary manuscript as the work of Nicolaus Adam Strungk. They are found in a collection, dated 1688, in the Lowell Mason library at Yale university with Strungk's name and the precise date of composition at the head of each piece. The fifth capriccio is also found elsewhere with Strungk named as the composer. cf. Behrend, Fritz. Nicolaus Adam Strungk.
